Thread

Peter Todd
@peterktodd

Hypocritical that Matthew Green is criticizing GnuPG for not implementing a safer default to preserve backwards incompatibility, when the team he's on has made millions on a private cryptocurrency that didn't default to privacy.

Likely far more will be hurt by Zcash than GnuPG.

Matthew Green @matthew_d_green · May 14, 2018

So in summary, PGP clients are vulnerable because 17 years after a vulnerability was known, the mitigation was not made a default in GnuPG and defense was instead "left to PGP clients", which also make a convenient scapegoat when it goes pear-shaped. 12/

Remember that when Zcash shipped on day one, shielded transactions _didn't_ even work_. And even when that bug was fixed, there was no way for average users to use them.

Zcash Bug Prevents Private Transactions Soon After Launch
A bug in Zcash is currently preventing private transactions with no known z-addr transactions having been made since launch.

Hypocrisy is a typical quality of some #Zcash team members. Just like narrow-mindedness is a typical quality of some #Bitcoin team members. What personal quality to assign to #IOTA ones?..

What does that have to do with #efail? Just because someone was involved in a project you disagree with (for good or bad reasons), their opinion on an unrelated vulnerability does not count?

Peter Todd @peterktodd · May 14, 2018

I'm not criticising Matthew's opinion on #efail, I'm criticising his conduct.

Peter Todd @peterktodd · May 14, 2018

Note how Green's language on this issue was accusing GnuPG of unethical behavior, when I think he's even more guilty of that.

Green would do well to cut that out, especially given he's talking about an underfunded non-profit project, GnuPG.

Pieter Wuille @pwwuille · May 14, 2018

I don't see it that way. I think leaving authentication optional was a bad technical decision, overpriorizing compatibility. I also think Zcash shipping with slow signing was a bad technical decision, overprioritizing other things. But can we discuss one without the other?

I agree with many of your criticisms, but bringing it up here is needlessly antagonizing and unhelpful.

Peter Todd @peterktodd · May 14, 2018
See, I agree that it's inevitably going to be antagonizing to a degree, but I don't think that's unhelpful. Right now as a community we're failing to set professional standards at all; if we don't bring this up, what then?
2 14

Pieter Wuille @pwuille · May 14, 2018
But you *can* bring this up. You just don't need to do that in response to a completely unrelated topic. This undermines your own credibility.

Peter Todd @peterktodd · May 14, 2018
I agree that's a risk, but that's a risk I'm happy to take.
Equally I think it's less undermining than you'd think in the context of twitter: this isn't, for instance, a person to person debate on a stage; I'm not in a technical debate right now.

Oh god Peter. Take a break and stop being a troll for five minutes. You'll be a happier human being and a more technically compelling one.

Why don't you guys just apologize for past mistakes and move on?

Peter Todd @peterktodd · May 14, 2018
This is not hard. You screwed up in a few ways, and are consistently unwilling to admit it. This is very harmful behavior in the long run for the whole community.

Matthew Green @matthew_d_green · May 14, 2018
Let go of your anger, Peter. Seriously. There are other ways to interact with this community.

Peter Todd @peterktodd · May 14, 2018
Dude, this is just professionalism, not anger.
Again, we have professional standards to set and a duty to the public.

"Professional" is not what I would call this twitter dialogue.

this is a dumb comment. Have you read the Zcash paper? It is meant to be built on top of a transparent cryptocurrency.

You can think of Zcash whatever you want but that's just another story. The comparison here is not helpful.
1 19

Peter Todd @peterktodd · May 14, 2018
You know what would be helpful? Apologizing to the community and fixing that screw up.
Failing to do that sets bad precedents.

Peter Todd @peterktodd · May 14, 2018
And seriously, it really wouldn't take much to fix these issues; genuine apologies go a long way, because they help set standards for behavior in the future.
